

Asian Studies and recent international events: challenges and lessons

Centre for Asian Studies (Vytautas Magnus University) invites researchers, administrators, and teachers to Erasmus Blended Intensive Program to gather and share experiences from different institutions regarding (but not limited to) Asian studies and evaluate them in the recent international context.

The last few years brought about many changes to our work style. On the one hand it temporarily closed many opportunities to travel for research/teaching purposes, but on the other, it offered new means to teach/learn as well as access various data online. Now, as the countries are reopening again, we are facing another challenge for international cooperation with Russo-Ukrainian war. We believe that now is the best time to reflect on these issues and share the experiences dealing with the recent challenges of pandemic and post-pandemic situations. What challenges we faced and how they were solved? Have the teaching/learning methods changed and how? Have the research topics changed and how? How was the international cooperation affected? Feel free to include and discuss other relevant international events as well.

N.B.! Here, term “Asian studies” is used in its broadest meaning, including Near East, Middle East, East Asia, etc.

One part of the program will consist of presentations, given by each participant, and cultural activities in Kaunas (see table below). The second part of the program will take place online, March 2.

Application deadline: December 23. The program is for only 15-20 participants so do not hesitate to apply promptly. Person in charge Mr. Arvydas Kumpis (Arvydas.kumpis@vdu.lt)

Be sure to contact and consult your institutional Erasmus coordinator about the participation – this is very important. The physical part is basically the staff training visit in Erasmus+ terms with personal Mobility Agreements and you are eligible for financial support with Erasmus+ funding.
